

News Sheet 17 – September 2011

(LBD AHS.org.uk)

This autumn sees the publication of the Society's latest book, the history of the town in the civil war. All society members will be invited to the launch party. Details nearer the time. The society has also decided to improve and update our website. This is partly so that people from far and wide who may not be able to travel to the town can share in our heritage and history. It is also a useful way of selling our publications which are one of the society's main forms of income. Below is a list of the exciting talks and other events the committee has arranged for this autumn and winter. The list includes regular Research Group sessions on a wide range of projects. We have also had discussions with the Leighton Buzzard Observer to improve our links. This follows the series of successful articles that members have written for the 150th anniversary of the paper. Our thanks and congratulations to all those who have worked so hard on this project. The next article is on the secret establishments of Leighton in the Second World War. This year Living History Day has been abandoned in favour of cultural events so we will not be having our stall this time. Soon a small team will be sorting out the contributions for the society's annual publication Transactions - this will be number 6. Anyone who has anything they would like to offer can they let me know. The deadline is December 31.

All the best, Paul Brown.

This talk will examine what we know of Leighton Buzzard's historic mills from a variety of sources and explore them in the context of the other watermills in the Ouzel valley. Where were Leighton's windmills and why were there so many? Who were the millers and what was the role of the millwrights? Why did our mills disappear? Is there enough information to construct a history of milling in the town? All of these questions and more will be the subject of this well-illustrated talk.

We will see an assortment of the type of show and the different types of slides that would have been used at the time e.g. comic sets, black and white photographic slides, moving slides of several types, advertising slides etc. The demonstration will last from 50 to 55 minutes after which questions will be welcomed.
